Dear Hal:

This season is a good occasion to send you again my best wishes. You and your work have been much on my mind. How I wish your material were well published and I could go to work spreading the information you have gathered.

Our country drags its weary way toward the decay and failure that moral weakness brings and which were implicit in the events you have delved into — and yet more in their cover up.

My concentration is on building the "alternate society" which youth increasingly realizes is necessary. In the midst of the futility and hopelessness of the drug-preoccupied there is little hope, but there is much else simultaneously developing that is the hope of the future.

So, a good Christmas and a fulfilling new year to the Wesbergs. — Truem Morgan
